

How the Human Heart Pumps Blood

How the Human Heart Pumps Blood

Think of your heart as a two-story house with four rooms. The top rooms collect blood; the bottom rooms forcefully pump it out. Valves act like one-way doors so blood never flows backward. An electrical spark keeps the rhythm steady.

Continue learning at QRU:

